the threat posed by the recent rise of transnational non state armed groups does not fit easily within either of the two basic paradigms for state responses to violence the civilian paradigm focuses on the interception of demonstrable immediate threats to the safety of others the military paradigm focuses on threats posed by collective actors who pose a danger to the state s ability to maintain basic social order and at times the state the book suggests that we need not see the options as confined to this binary choice as it evaluates the philosophical and ethical implications of using both military and non military frameworks for pursuing counterterrorism operations marked changes in the balance of power between states in the international system are generally seen by ir scholars as among the most common causes of war this book explains why such power shifts lead to war breaking out in some cases but not in others in contrast to existing approaches this book argues that the military strategy of declining states is the key determinant of whether power shifts result in war or pass peacefully more specifically dong sun lee argues that the probability of war is primarily a function of whether a declining state possesses a manoeuvre strategy or an attrition strategy the argument is developed through the investigation of fourteen power shifts among great powers over the past two centuries shifts in the balance of power and the attendant risks of war remain an enduring feature of international politics this book argues that policymakers need to understand the factors influencing the risk of war as a result of these changes in particular the contemporary shifts in power resulting from the rise of china and from the growth of nuclear proliferation this book seeks to offer a general interpretation and critique of both methodological and substantive aspects of international theory
